The Sholapith Helmet is a light weighted sun helmet. The cloth cover and the particular style prevented the wearers head from the sun. The pith helmet was first worn by Spanish forces during the colonial era of the Spanish East Indies and was later adopted by the French in Indochina due to its effectiveness. Such was the popularity of the pith helmet that it became a common civilian headgear for Westerners in the tropics from the end of the 19th century. The civilian pith helmet was typically less decorative and more practical.
